

Jennie Chang De Gagne, PhD, DNP, RN, NPD-BC, CNE, ANEF, FAAN

Dr. De Gagne is a Professor and the Director of the Nursing Education Major at the Duke University School of Nursing, United States. With expertise in instructional technologies and nursing education, she has dedicated her research efforts to advancing the science of teaching and learning. She is a leading advocate for promoting cybercivility and has successfully led innovative projects addressing incivility in cyberspace in nursing education. Her scholarly contributions include over 200 publications, consisting of 105 peer-reviewed journal articles, and she is a highly sought-after presenter on topics such as teaching innovation, online education, and faculty development. She is a fellow of the National League for Nursing Academy of Nursing Education and the American Academy of Nursing. Dr. De Gagne's achievements have been recognized through numerous scholarships, awards, and media features, both nationally and internationally.